Dear Friends,

During the fall semester break, 14 of our students traveled to Camden, New Jersey, and volunteered in various community service projects. A King's alumnus generously hosted these King's students for dinner and reported back to me how impressed he was with the poise, passion, and commitment of these "scholars in service". These students made him proud to be an alumnus; our students make me proud to be President of King's College.

From our founding in 1946, King's College has been preparing students to not only make a living, but to make a life. King's has helped thousands of students develop the skills, abilities, knowledge and character necessary to become competent professionals, engaged and enlightened citizens, faithful friends, and loving family members. As I get to know you in ever increasing numbers, and hear your stories of a favorite teacher, or a special coach, or a caring staff or faculty member who touched your life in a profound and lasting way, I am more convinced than ever that King's College has been faithful to its mission of preparing students to make both a living and a life.

Please know how much the King's College community appreciates your support in preparing future generations of alumni for satisfying and purposeful lives.

Sincerely,

Rev. John J. Ryan, C.S.C., Ph.D.
