

Ask yourself . . .

Are you challenging yourself in high school with advanced, honors, or AP courses? Do you want to attend an elite graduate school, medical school, or law school? Do you want to become a CPA or a physician assistant? Do you want to land a job with a prestigious firm? If your answer is yes and you have a strong high school academic record, then you should consider the King's College Honors Program.

"The Honors Program is the perfect balance of a challenging yet rewarding education. There's a lot to learn and a lot more to love."

-Vanessa Camille '22

"Being a part of the Honors Program coming into my first year of college was an indispensable marker as I made the assimilation into campus life, providing me with access to like-minded peers — many of which

I would soon call like-minded friends. It is for this very reason that I believe the Honors Program and its students are so successful: the Honors Program at King's is designed to be as equally enriching academically as it is collaboratively and socially."

-Michael Ecker '22

"The people at King's care about each other's success. When someone is a part of your community you want to help them as if you needed that help."

-Olivia Ostrowski '21

A Vibrant Learning Community

Working closely with dedicated professors, King's Honors students from all majors exchange ideas, debate, and practice independent thinking through an individualized program of instruction. Because of the advanced level of the coursework, Honors students take fewer required courses, enabling them to more easily pursue a minor or second major.

King's Honors students benefit from:

- Small Classes. Honors classes are limited to 15 students, allowing for more personal interaction with professors and classmates.
- Engaged Learning. Honors classes are taught in an interactive classroom format emphasizing discussion and thorough exploration of subject matter.

Our program extends learning beyond the classroom through a variety of teaching methods, such as study abroad and service learning, and internships. Other opportunities to learn outside the classroom include:

- The Grimes Lecture series:

The Honors Student Advisory Council invites a major scholar to speak on campus each year to challenge our Honors students' thinking.

- Our monthly "Lounge and Learn" event, in which a faculty member visits the Honors Lounge to discuss his or her current area of research in a relaxed atmosphere.
- Weekend trips to cities such as New York City, Boston and Washington, D.C.

A Supportive Network A Successful Future

A Unique Learning Environment

A Successful Future

At graduation, each Honors student is awarded an Honors Certificate and Medal, which testify to the student's intellectual initiative and personal maturity. We are especially proud of the high rate of acceptance of our Honors students to professional programs, such as law and medical school. Our graduates go on to promising careers as physician assistants, engineers, psychologists, doctors, lawyers, teachers, business people, and certified public accountants. We believe King's Honors students are able to achieve such success because of our ability to offer a personalized liberal arts education in a rigorous but supportive environment.

A Supportive Network

Honors students are part of a strong network that is both challenging and supportive, elevating their academic performance and confidence. Students accustomed to a competitive environment will find the close-knit community of the King's Honors Program quite refreshing. The center of student life is the Honors Lounge where students congregate for study groups, informal discussions, and formal presentations.

Our Student Advisory Council organizes special social events and activities for Honors students, including service projects, movie nights, and cultural excursions to major metropolitan areas.
